The Stanley's are not at all committed to Richard's cause, and may change sides and fight for Henry. They begin the game in neutral, with Hold orders. Until activated, their orders (whether fielded together or apart) can only change as a result of changing circumstances on the battlefield not as a result of Richard spending command points to do so. Roll a dice each time one of the following circumstances occurs:

If Henry moves into charge range of the enemy, roll 1d6.

- On a score of 6, the Stanley's take on Attack orders and join Henry in the battle.

If Henry becomes involved in a melee roll 1d6.

- On a score of 1-2, the Stanley's take on Retreat orders and leave the battlefield. On a score of 5-6, the Stanley's take Attack orders and go to Henry's aid.

If Northumberland advances roll 1d6.

- On a score of 1-3, the Stanley's take on Retreat orders. On 4-6, they Attack, fighting for Richard.

If Henry is wounded, roll 1d6.

- On a 1-3, the Stanley's take on Retreat orders. On a 4-6, they take Attack orders and come to his aid.

Once the Stanley's have committed to fighting either for Richard or for Henry, they may not change sides again, and come under the normal command hierarchy of the side for which they are fighting. Their orders may therefore be changed by the appropriate commander. If they adopt Retreat orders, whilst still on the battlefield they still roll a dice if circumstances dictate, as above, representing their indecision as to which side to join.
