MDMS tanks may be either manned or AI. Whichever is the case, they count as having a Gunner for the main gun. There are four standard armament packages, including a shield generator that projects its shield out at a 90° angle from the generator to a distance of 18".
All Space Dwarf units are also Engineers.

Order of Battle
Lethings (led by a Steward Big Man) consisting of one to three 10-man or 6-man squads	Make a Lething mobile by attaching a platoon of up to three Cane Toad APCs	Platoons of 3 Goanna/Taipan Tanks (common configuration is two with main gun armament supported by one with shield generator)
Leid (led by a Force Commander Big Man) consisting of 1-2 Lethings	MAKO weapons are deployed in pairs of either Autocannon or Mortars, and attached at Leid level

Background
Thrainites
 The Thrainites are the descendents of a colony of humans from earth who were sent through a wormhole to the Canis Majoris system, almost 4,000 light years away, during the first wave of interstellar migration in the 22nd Century. The colony was never heard from again, as was indeed expected to happen, but after the Awakening, when humans were taught to fully exploit wormhole travel, one of the first missions was to seek out the seed colonists, including the CM Seed. They were found to have survived and built a new civilization for themselves, calling themselves Thrainites, living in several neighboring star systems, and governing themselves by monarchy. Living for centuries on planets slightly larger than earth, they have gradually mutated to a shorter, stockier stature than Terra humans. Many millions have migrated closer to the Federation since contact was reestablished, but even then tend to live amongst themselves.

Thrainites are by disposition a somber people with a serious attitude toward war and conquest. They can be aggressive and expansionist, especially toward aliens, but generally prefer commerce to hostilities and export a series of rare minerals throughout the galaxy. They can be paid to fight for a cause they can support, as they did in the Molch Vornid War, turning the tide in that conflict.

The Thrainites are close assault specialists, preferring automatic slugthrowers to energy weapons. Thrainite combat forces are built around the Lething, a body of freemen who serve their local Stewards. Lethings are their equivalent of a squad or section, but can vary in size from 8 Thrainites to over 20, depending on the resources and prestige of the Steward. The basic building block of a Lething is the Clutch, closely equivalent to a fire team, made up of a veteran leading three other freemen. To these can be added heavy weapons specialists using such weapons as missile launchers, heavy anti-material rifles and knee mortars. A Lething can be the size of a platoon, but are more commonly 14-18 soldiers total, including the Steward and his heavy slug-thrower House Man. Nobles of higher rank than Steward fight when young in Assisted Carapace Armour assault squads of six Thrainites, and upon achieving veteran status are often given higher commands, culminating in Force Commander rank, an officer leading a Leid (company) or larger formation.

Since they have renewed contact with Terra, the Thrainites have bought large quantities of MDMS Vehicles and greatly prefer these simple, rugged designs to the more complex Federal Army vehicles, although they have bought limited quantities of those as well. They also employ the MAKO tractor and gun system to provide the Lethings with mobile heavy firepower.

High Gravity Mercenaries

Humanity has spread throughout the cosmos and often upon worlds that, while similar, are different in fundamental ways from our own. On the larger rocky planets with a habitable biome colonies can form and flourish over a period of many years. Those that do the best and prosper on the high-gravity worlds tend to be stockier and harderier than their brethren on standard-class gravity worlds. This squad of eight (8) veteran mercs hail from a high-gravity world and have a proven track record as evidence of their toughness.

Sons of Thunder

After several 100 years of genetic manipulation, Earth had finally created the perfect workers for it's planetary terraforming projects. Spread out across the galaxy these pint-size workers toiled to bring habitable planets into the Earth Force Empire. But as Earth begins to lose it's grip on the galaxy, the Sons of Thunder begin to scheme...
